Get A Quote - Fragile Removals

Canonical: https://www.fragileremovals.com.au/get-a-quote/

Details:

Open the detailed quote form to provide the information needed for your move estimate. You can also call 1800 500 584 or contact us to discuss your requirements.

Information to prepare

Have both addresses, your preferred collection and delivery dates, and a room-by-room inventory ready. Include garages, sheds, outdoor furniture and stored belongings as well as the main rooms.

Describe access at both properties, including stairs, lifts, restricted parking, long carries and narrow doors or turns. Identify pianos, artwork, large appliances, gym equipment and other heavy, fragile or unusually shaped items separately.

Choose the work you want priced

State whether you need packing, unpacking, cartons, dismantling, reassembly, storage or specialist handling. If a date, address or inventory item is still uncertain, identify it as unresolved so the estimate is not mistaken for a confirmed scope.

The written quote should identify the accepted inventory, addresses, services, pricing basis and the circumstances that may change timing or cost. For help comparing quotes, read How to Choose a Good Removalist .

What a quote can and cannot settle

A quote prices the job as you have described it. It does not confirm a date until a booking is accepted, and it cannot settle questions that depend on the actual property until someone has assessed it. Treat the figure as conditional on the inventory and access you gave us, and ask which parts are firm and which are assumptions. If a detail is still unknown — a settlement date, whether a wardrobe will be dismantled, whether the lift can be booked — say so rather than guessing, because an estimate built on a guess has to be revised later anyway.

If your dates are not fixed yet

Plenty of moves are priced before settlement or a lease end is certain. Ask for the quote on your most likely date and then ask what changes if the date moves by a few days or into a different week. The points to clarify are whether the price depends on the day of the week or the time of month, how much notice a change needs, and whether anything you pay now is transferable. Get the answer in writing so a later change is a conversation about a documented position rather than a new negotiation.

Asking for a storage quote at the same time

If your move-out and move-in dates do not line up, price the gap at the same time as the move rather than afterwards. Tell us roughly how long the gap is, whether you will need anything out of storage during it, and whether the goods can be delivered straight from storage to the new address. Handling in and out, the storage period itself and redelivery are usually separate charges, so ask for them itemised. A combined quote also shows whether one longer booking is cheaper than two separate arrangements.

Asking for a business or office quote

A commercial move is priced on different information from a household one. Useful detail includes the number of workstations, whether IT equipment is being disconnected and reconnected by us or by your own provider, any after-hours or weekend requirement, building access rules such as dock bookings and lift permits, and the date the new site has to be operational. Say which items cannot be out of service and for how long. Ask for the quote to separate transport from any reinstatement or installation work.

Why an inspection may be suggested

For some jobs the quickest route to an accurate price is for someone to look at the property, in person or over a video call. That tends to apply where there is unusual access, a large or unclear inventory, heavy or delicate items, or a building with its own rules. An assessment protects you as much as us: it reduces the chance of a variation on the day. Ask what the assessment covers, whether there is any charge for it, and whether the resulting price is held for a period.

Send the request

Complete the detailed quote form when the move details are ready. If the move is urgent or unusually complex, call 1800 500 584 so availability and the information needed for an estimate can be discussed.

What information should I provide for a moving quote?

Provide both addresses, preferred dates, a room-by-room inventory and the access at collection and delivery. Include garages, sheds and stored goods, and identify heavy, fragile or unusually shaped items separately. State the packing, dismantling, storage, reassembly or unpacking work you want included. If a detail is uncertain, label it as unresolved so the estimate can state its assumptions.

Can I request packing or storage with the move?

Yes. List the rooms or items that need packing, whether materials are required, and any unpacking or furniture work you want priced. For storage, identify the goods, expected duration, access needs and preferred return delivery. The quote should distinguish transport, packing, storage and later handling so the scope and charges can be reviewed separately.

What access details affect the estimate?

Describe stairs, lifts, parking restrictions, long carries, narrow doors and restricted loading times at both properties. Include building bookings and any route that may affect a large item. Access can change the crew, equipment and time required, so provide the actual property conditions rather than relying on the suburb or property type alone.

Is submitting the form a confirmed booking?

No. The form supplies information for an estimate or quote request. Review the written scope, price, dates, terms and any insurance information, then follow the stated acceptance and booking process. Tell the coordinator if the inventory, addresses, access, dates or required services change before collection.

How do you choose the work you want priced?

State whether you need packing, unpacking, cartons, dismantling, reassembly, storage or specialist handling. If a date, address or inventory item is still uncertain, identify it as unresolved so the estimate is not mistaken for a confirmed scope. The written quote should identify the accepted inventory, addresses, services, pricing basis and the circumstances that may change timing or cost.

What information should you prepare before requesting a quote?

Have both addresses, your preferred collection and delivery dates, and a room-by-room inventory ready. Include garages, sheds, outdoor furniture and stored belongings as well as the main rooms. Describe access at both properties, including stairs, lifts, restricted parking, long carries and narrow doors or turns. <!--

How do you send the quote request?

Complete the detailed quote form when the move details are ready. If the move is urgent or unusually complex, call 1800 500 584 so availability and the information needed for an estimate can be discussed.

What can a quote settle, and what can it not?

A quote prices the job as you have described it. It does not confirm a date until a booking is accepted, and it cannot settle questions that depend on the actual property until someone has assessed it. Treat the figure as conditional on the inventory and access you gave us, and ask which parts are firm and which are assumptions. If a detail is still unknown — a settlement date, whether a wardrobe will be dismantled, whether the lift can be booked — say so rather than guessing, because an estimate built on a guess has to be revised later anyway.

Can I get a quote before my dates are confirmed?

Plenty of moves are priced before settlement or a lease end is certain. Ask for the quote on your most likely date and then ask what changes if the date moves by a few days or into a different week. The points to clarify are whether the price depends on the day of the week or the time of month, how much notice a change needs, and whether anything you pay now is transferable. Get the answer in writing so a later change is a conversation about a documented position rather than a new negotiation.

How do I price a gap between moving out and moving in?

If your move-out and move-in dates do not line up, price the gap at the same time as the move rather than afterwards. Tell us roughly how long the gap is, whether you will need anything out of storage during it, and whether the goods can be delivered straight from storage to the new address. Handling in and out, the storage period itself and redelivery are usually separate charges, so ask for them itemised. A combined quote also shows whether one longer booking is cheaper than two separate arrangements.

What information does a business or office quote need?

A commercial move is priced on different information from a household one. Useful detail includes the number of workstations, whether IT equipment is being disconnected and reconnected by us or by your own provider, any after-hours or weekend requirement, building access rules such as dock bookings and lift permits, and the date the new site has to be operational. Say which items cannot be out of service and for how long. Ask for the quote to separate transport from any reinstatement or installation work.

Why might an inspection be suggested before quoting?

For some jobs the quickest route to an accurate price is for someone to look at the property, in person or over a video call. That tends to apply where there is unusual access, a large or unclear inventory, heavy or delicate items, or a building with its own rules. An assessment protects you as much as us: it reduces the chance of a variation on the day. Ask what the assessment covers, whether there is any charge for it, and whether the resulting price is held for a period.