Details:

Perth may appeal if you want coastal recreation, a different climate or a new work and housing arrangement. Use these five themes to test the move against your own household. A positive city description is only useful when the home, commute and budget work for you.

1. A summer-and-winter pattern worth comparing

Perth has hot summers and cooler, wetter winters. The Bureau of Meteorology's Perth Metro climate statistics show the seasonal temperature and rainfall pattern. Compare it with how you use your home and spend time outdoors rather than assuming one climate suits everyone.

When viewing a property, consider shade, cooling, heating and the outdoor spaces you expect to use. For moving day, follow the current forecast and discuss access or timing changes with us if weather affects preparation.

2. Beaches and city activities in the same region

Cottesloe Beach, Leighton Beach, Mettams Pool, Bathers Beach and City Beach are options to explore, alongside Perth's cafes, restaurants, arts and sporting activities. Rottnest Island is another destination reached by ferry. Check the actual journey and service arrangements for the places you would visit regularly.

Living near a favourite beach is different from having a convenient everyday routine. Compare work travel, shops, appointments and the people you want to stay close to before selecting a suburb.

3. Work opportunities that match your experience

Perth is home to employers across several industries. For example, Wesfarmers is headquartered in Perth. An employer's presence does not establish a vacancy or a suitable role, so check the work location, employment terms and arrangements relevant to you before committing to a move.

If the role involves travel, shifts or work outside central Perth, include those requirements when comparing homes. Confirm a practical employment plan rather than relying on a city-wide unemployment figure or a general promise of available jobs.

4. A chance to reassess the home you need

Compare current Perth properties against your budget, preferred dwelling type and space requirements. Use actual listings, inspections and property documents. Whether buying or renting, check the costs and obligations for the particular home; Perth should not be assumed cheaper than another city for every household.

Measure larger furniture before deciding what to bring. A change in home layout can make selling, donating or storing an item more practical than transporting it without knowing where it will fit.

5. Travel connections that fit your plans

If you expect to visit family interstate or travel overseas regularly, compare current routes, timetables, total journey times and prices for those trips. Flight and ferry schedules can change, so choose the connection you can actually book rather than relying on a permanent direct-route or flight-time claim.

Keep your own travel booking separate from the furniture delivery window. An interstate collection date does not mean your belongings will arrive when you do.

Plan the move once the important decisions are settled

We handle local and interstate move enquiries. Give us both addresses, preferred dates and the services required so we can confirm availability and the proposed route in writing. Give us the addresses, inventory, access and preferred dates, and identify any delivery or storage gap. Use our moving checklist to coordinate property handover and packing.

Is Perth necessarily cheaper than my current city?

No. Compare the actual housing arrangement, utilities, transport and household spending you expect at the new address. A city-wide median or an older ranking does not establish your costs. Keep ongoing expenses separate from the one-off removal, packing, travel and any storage or temporary accommodation. Use current property and provider information before deciding that the move will create a saving.

What should I check for a particular Perth address?

Check the dwelling, layout, access and the journeys you make regularly. Compare work travel at the times you need it, and confirm school, childcare or other essential service arrangements directly. Think about shade, cooling, heating and outdoor space through the year. Measure larger furniture and check the delivery path before booking its transport.

What should I give you after choosing a property?

Give us both addresses, the furniture and carton inventory, dates and the first confirmed day you can receive goods. Describe stairs, lifts, parking, loading restrictions and unusual items. Identify packing, dismantling and storage needs separately, and mark any provisional details. We can then assess the route and access and provide a quote for the agreed work.

How can I test whether these reasons suit my household?

Turn each theme into a practical question: does the climate suit how you live, can you reach the places you value, is your work arrangement realistic, does a suitable home fit the budget and do regular travel connections work? Record the evidence for each answer. Resolve the decisions that affect the others before committing to property and moving bookings.

Which five themes should I compare?

Compare climate, coastal and city activities, employment, housing and travel connections. Give more weight to the factors that affect your ordinary week. A home near the beach may still involve an unsuitable commute, while a promising job may have a work location outside the area you first considered. Use the themes together rather than treating any one of them as a reason everyone should move.

How do I build the relocation budget?

Price the ongoing household arrangement separately from the transition. For the move, include the removal quote, packing, travel and any temporary accommodation, storage or redelivery. Confirm when you receive keys and when your goods can arrive. Give us the same current inventory and requested work when comparing date options, and update the quote if the property or scope changes.
